New flavor?

If you're wondering what Mr. Spumoni has been putting in his ice cream, we can assure you that the ingredients are all natural. The fireworks in the dish are the result of a double exposure. After taking pictures of the fireworks on Saturday night, the editor misplaced one roll of film. Then on Tuesday morning, he took pictures of Jennifer Ausiello and Darlene Scarfo having ice cream at Mr. Spumoni's, with a group from the Wilmington Recreation Department with the same roll of film. Once the film was developed, it was obvious what happened. (Photo by Larz F. Neilson)

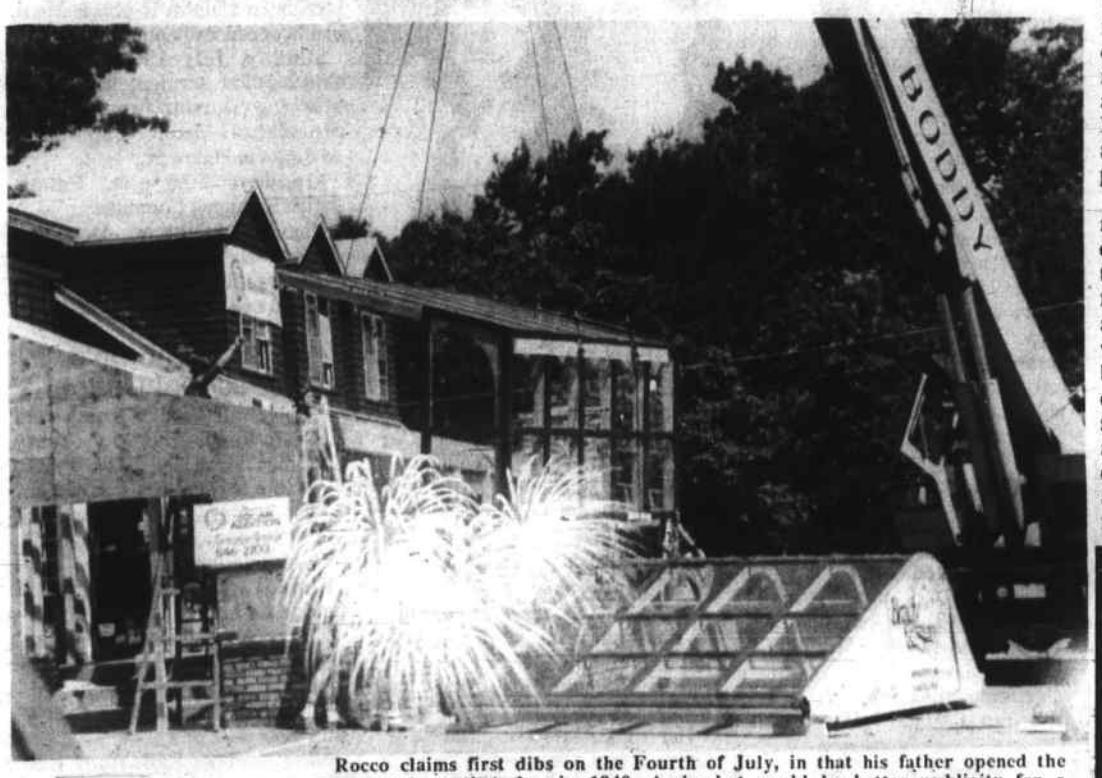

Greenhouse and Groceria to add new sparkle

Rocco's Restaurant, a landmark on Route 38 known for its distinctive stone architecture and warm atmosphere is expanding. On Tuesday, this 46-year-old establishment celebrated its anniversary with an innovative transformation. A pre-built glass and wood solarium was lowered by a crane onto the front of the existing restaurant creating a new light and airy dining area.

Sunspace Design of Arlington installed the handsome wood and insulated glass product, manufactured by Brady and Sun of Worcester. The new dining area will add over 60 seats to increase Rocco's seating capacity to 150. While introducing an exciting new look with the open-glassed area, much attention has been paid to maintaining the many unique architectural features such as the fieldstone work, most of which was built by the father of the current owner, Rocco DePasquale, in the 1940's. A beautiful stone fireplace adorns the north wall of the solarium.

Along with the beautiful addition, the existing dining area will be refurbished and a new section will be introduced - Rocco's Groceria. The Groceria will offer homemade, fully prepared dinners, breads, desserts, as well as daily specials, sauces, soups, and deli-delights. Many of the daily specials served in the Groceria will be featured on the exciting new luncheon and dinner menus in the restaurant.

Rocco's will remain open during this renovation which is scheduled for completion by fall.

Sparkle under glass

Rocco claims first dibs on the Fourth of July, in that his father opened the restaurant on that day in 1940. And what could be better publicity for a restaurant with a Fourth of July birthday than to have the restaurant's new greenhouse addition installed on (almost) July Fourth. Well, actually, it was done on the eighth, but thanks to the double exposure on the part of the editor, the new greenhouse and the Fourth of July fireworks ended up all in one picture.

Environmental statement likely for apartments

by Arlene Surprenant

An Environmental Impact Report (EIR) may be required on a development proposed for Ballardvale street if traffic statistics listed in an Environmental Notification Form (ENF) are found to be in conflict with figures brought out by Town Manager Buzz Stapczynski.

The Statement was made by Jackie Wilkins of the state's Massachusetts Environmental Protection Agency (MEPA) during Thursday's consultation session at the town hall.

The two hour session was held to receive public comments relating to environmental issues on the 22.5 acre site. Following a 30-day review period which ends July 24, the secretary of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs will determine the need for an EIR. The report can be required on certain grounds, one of which would be the project's impact on traffic in the area.

The meeting was well attended by representatives of the Investors Management Group (IMG), residents of the Arlene Avenue neighborhood, and state and local officials who came prepared to express their concerns and raise questions about the 204 unit apartment project.

For most, it was their first chance to view the preliminary site plan, a plan which includes "basically" 12 unit buildings, a clubhouse, swimming pool, and a small pond in the retention area. Also shown in the plan is a two-loop roadway crossing over a stream, wetland area, and three drainage ditches by the pond. Access would be off Ballardvale Street with a utility easement off Arlene Avenue.

Proponents of the project said they have already surveyed and flagged wetlands and tried to lay out buildings to have "a minimal impact on wetlands." They have also applied to the Mass. Housing Finance Agency for site approval and to the state DPW for a curb cut permit.

Conservation Commission Chairman, Chester Bruce, raised many questions relating to water flow, the replacement area, erosion, flood control, and water pollution and refuted ENF statistics on wildlife and the number of trees to be cut. One abutter, too, expressed concerns about water drainage saying "you're (IMG) going to do an awful lot of disruption" especially since the neighborhood is already experiencing basement flooding problems.

Possible water pollution and the difficulty, at present, of hooking up to the town sewer system, were two areas discussed by Arthur Smith of the Water and Sewer Commission.

Any effluent from the project would go into the wellfield area at Brown's Crossing, said Smith, adding that "this is absolutely one of our concerns" as it would lead to pollution of Wilmington's groundwater.

Smith also nixed any plan to tie into the industrial sewer line along Ballardvale Street, explaining that line "has reached its limit," or bringing the line down Arlene Avenue to Salem Street to the interceptor. The project would have to tie in to the Woburn Street interceptor, added Smith, and that trunk line is approximately 10 years in the future.

When pressed for other alternatives Frederick Geisel, of the Green International Affiliates engineering firm, said they could go behind Arlene Avenue to conservation land and tie in there. Right now, though, everything seems to be "up in the air" he admitted.

Tom Flaherty of the state DEQE claimed testing wasn't done with any state official present to see if the ground is suitable for in-ground disposal

"If there isn't a place to go in ground, the project is dead," said Flaherty.

Edward Elfman of the Dept. of Public Works explained that he found "tremendous faults with the ENF in itself." He disputed vehicle trip statistics, calling those in the report "conservative." He said he still wasn't sure where an access road would come out to Ballardvale Street.

When Wilkins asked Geisel where he obtained his traffic figures,he replied they were "standard figures" based on prior traffic studies for similar projects.

Planning board chairman Carole Hamilton questioned how the project would relate to existing zoning and what benefits the town can expect financially, economically, and environmentally.

After the meeting, IMG vice-president William Brown said he was "optimistic" about the project's outcome. He said he was reasonably certain he would get his curb cut and explained "I wouldn't have come this far if I didn't think that."

Brown claimed the site itself is "very responsible" because of its proximity to Route 93, the fence and shrubs they will use as a buffer zone, and the fact that the project "will not affect anyone to the east."

When asked why the ENF was incomplete, Brown replied that some of the data wasn't available and "the answers would come later" when he does more "detailed" planning.

There is still time to send written comments on the Environmental Notification Form for the Wilmington Arboretum Apartments. Deadline for letters is July 14. Letters should be addressed to:

"Summer Hazards" brochure, free

Summertime means leisure and lots of outdoor activities.

It can also mean potential hazards such as severe sunburn after too many hours in the sun, food poisoning after a neighborhood barbecue, or an allergic reaction to a bee sting.

A little knowledge about summer hazards, how to prevent them and how to treat them helps keep summertime activities safe and fun.

A "Summer Hazards" brochure is available from Choate-Symmes Health Services. Prepared by Mary Ellen DeTeso, RN, a nurse in the emergency/walk-in care center at the Choate Hospital Division, the brochure includes information on a variety of summer hazards such as sunburn, cuts and lacerations, fires and severe burns, near drowning, insect bites, sprains and fractures.

"Summer Hazards" provides first aid information until medical attention is obtained, if necessary.

A copy of the brochure is available without charge from the Choate-Symmes Community Relations Department, 646-1500, ext. 1441.

State Representative Geoffrey C. Beckwith, who represents Reading, North Reading and Wilmington's precinct 3 in the Massachusetts House, this week announced the schedule for his July district office hours.

"A state representative must be accessible to every one in his or her district," said Beckwith, who holds regular office hours each month in order to make it easier for the constituents to meet with him whenever they have a question or a problem concerning state government.

Beckwith will hold July office hours at two locations: on Thursday evening, July 10, he will be at the Flint Memorial Library on Bow Street in North Reading from 5:30 to 7 p.m. and on Thursday evening, July 10, he will be in the conference room of the Reading Public Library on Middlesex Avenue from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Beckwith reports that many people are contacting him at both his home and State House offices with inquiries regarding legislation, and with suggestions on a variety of issues.

"Interested citizens should never hesitate to get in touch with me any time," said Beckwith, who invited residents to call him at either his state House office (722-2430) or at home (944-5030). "But these office hours will provide everyone with an additional opportunity to see me personally and offer input, ask for information, or request assistance with a problem regarding state government."

'A special way of using words' -- poetry by Helena Minton

by Arlene Surprenant

Starting today, Wilmington children will have a unique opportunity to explore the world of poetry.

Under the tutelage of local poetess Helena Minton, they will have a chance to read poems aloud, discuss meanings and images, and try their hand at some original works. They will also be shown the library's poetry section and encouraged to enter a rhyme time contest open to children aged five and up.

The poetry workshops slated for July 9, July 16 and July 23 ar part of the special reading program held in the town library this summer. They will be held from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. each Wednesday and limited to the first 20 children who sign up at the Children's Room.

Each workshop will center on a different theme. This week's theme was Crazy Animal POems. Next week, children will have the fun of looking at poems in all shapes and sizes while the "more sophisticated:" Magic Poems, written in the voice of another person or object, will round out the sessions.

The informal workshops are expected to give free reign to the children's imaginations, not only inc rating their own poems, but in illustrating them as well.

According to Mrs. Minton, she hopes participants will "come away with the feeling that poetry is fun and can be part of our everyday lives." She goes on to say that children shouldn't be "intimidated" by the shorter literary form as poetry is only "a special way of using words and making them beautiful, funny, or whatever."

Some of Mrs. Minton's own talent may be inherited, as her father is a journalist and both parents have exhibited long time interests in literature. As a child, Mrs. MInton was always encouraged to write, and eventually, she narrowed her interest to poetry as "I tend to think more in terms of phrases," she recently told the Town Crier.

Mrs. Minton holds a BA in English from Beloit College in Wisconsin and an MA in creative writing from UMass in Amherst.

She edited and wrote for the literary magazine LYNX in college and participated in poetry readings in graduate school. Once she attained her degree, she taught creative writing and English composition in Northeastern University and ran poetry workshops in Wilmington's North Intermediate School as well as in schools in Topsfield and Andover.

Residents can read samplings of Mrs. Minton's work in her book CANAL BED, a collection of personal lyric poetry on the Merrimack Valley and other subjects. The book was published last year and is available at Wilmington's Memorial Library.

Presently, this busy lady is dividing her time between leading workshops, raising her four-year-old son Ted, attending an informal writer's workshop, and taking courses in Boston's Simmons College toward the day she can become a full time librarian.

Of her decision to lead the workshops, Helena Minton says that's something she definitely wanted to do. She and Children's Librarian Sarah Reuter planned the workshops together following a few story hours she led at the library last year.

"I wanted to do something for the children. This seemed like the best thing I can offer," said Mrs. Minton modestly.

Tambone leases space to Woolrest

Tambone Corporation has leased 18,000 square feet of space at 100 Research Drive, Wilmington, in the Wilmington Technology Park, to Woolrest USA, a producer of 100 percent wool sleeping pads. Woolrest will use the space in the 101,000 square foot building for executive offices, storage and distribution.

In the lease negotiations, Tambone Corporation was represented by Mr. Joseph Flaherty of Meredith & Grew, exclusive leasing agent, and Terry Wilson of Coldwell Banker.

Wilmington Technology Park occupies 17 acres of land and will eventually contain six buildings. Woolrest is moving into the first of the Park's buildings, which already houses Polymer Technology, a division of Bausch & Lomb, in 51,000 square feet.

Anthony A. Tambone, president of Tambone Corporation, said the second building in the Park, 400 Research Drive, will provide 109,000 square feet in a single story, R&D building on which construction is expected to start soon and which will be available for occupancy in December 1986.

"The total buildout at Wilmington Technology Park will exceed 600,000 square feet of office and R&D space in both one and two story buildings. The Park is serviced by all utilities including a 1,500 foot interior roadway system which serves each building," he added.

Tambone Corporation is presently developing Hopkinton Office and Research Park and the Chelmsford Office & Research Park in Massachusetts, while in Florida where the Corporation has an office, it is developing office and industrial parks.

POEMS
by Helena Minton

from The Canal Bed

The Mountains of Ten Thousand Smokes

When I row I feel them closing in.
Through fog they're wisps, barely visible, photographs of the soul.
If the sun sends down its spokes peaks rear from the ocean, hard white folds disgorging mist.

They shift their weight when I blink, as if they might rise up or sink and take me with them.

The boat floats foward, its prow like two hands pressed together.

The Field by the Tew Mac Airport

Mornings I walk through foxtail to a weed-filled runway, head down, thoughts scattered like milkweed.
The dog crashes through cattails, flushes mourning doves.
He sniffs, stops, points
as if in a painting.
Above us small planes test the air's mood

Yesterday someone screamed, "Are you crazy?"
I turned to see a green wing almost touching my shoulder, a fist thrust from a cockpit; then I heard what I should have earlier: wheels skittering like bird legs on asphalt.

I ran to the pines, watched the plane lift shakily into the wind, the pilot's fufy spread through the sky,
while I pressed my cheek against the dog's cold neck.

Visit With My Mother

I see you less often now. Teatime, a tray placed on the polished table,
windows turning bluewith dusk, smell of sweet peas, even in winter.

You bend to pour the tea.
Steam drifts up.
Your face is smooth as marble.
You wear your mother's ruby on your hand.

As always, I admire your objects:
violets pressed in glass, pale vases, miniature angels playing violins, bulls in oils, silent, obedient,
the way you chose them.

While we talk you break dead leaves off a chrysanthemum, adjust gold cushions
as if arranging a still life.

We discuss our work, facing each other in blue armchairs, women the same height and weight wearing wool and silk.

letters to the editor

Dear Larz:

After reading Bill Conlon's editorial on private school busing in Tewksbury in the July 2nd edition, I feel compelled to make some comments.

First of all, Mr. Conlon's column reads much like that of an outsider looking in. I felt that he indicated no knowledge of the history of the issue, which is very important to understand the feelings of the two sides of the argument. I felt that his analogy of Northern Ireland was totally out of line, for this certainly is not a religious issue - you see people on both sides of the issue at St. William's every Saturday or Sunday. And lastly, the editor's labels of "Privo vs. Pub" is also inconsistent with the issue; as the conflict now is private school busing vs. the town budget. Mr. Conlon seemed startled that people without children in school would show up to vote on the busing issue. Doesn't every taxpayer have the right to vote on the town budget?

Mr. Conlon remarked that private school busing was once part of the school committee budget - that is true. He also inferred that this is a common factor in school committee budgets throughout the commonwealth. I am sure that if he did his research he would find that almost no communities throughout the state make any provision for private school busing; furthermore he would find no city or town that provides anywhere near the amount of money that Tewksbury has spent for years on this issue.

Yes, private school busing was a part of the school committee budget, in fact this issue was the priority of past school committees. As a very interested observer, it is disheartening to me to see the money spent on the public schools constantly being depleted: programs being eliminated, public school bus routes being doubled up, teachers being laid off, and the school buildings and properties falling into need of serious repair; while on the other hand the money for private school busing kept increasing. If private school parents went looking for more busses, more often than not they would get them from the school committee.

Be mindful that it was, and still is the school committee's responsibility to provide the best public education that they can - private school business is not the responsibility of the school committee - our former school committees did not seem to recognize this. As a parent, I can be upset that my daughter comes home from school with a broken collar bone suffered while playing in a rocky school yard - even though parents repeatedly approached the school committee to fix these play areas with no success; and often times meeting arrogance from these elected officials. How can a school committee unanimously turn its back on the findings of a nationally recognized accounting firm that advised them to eliminate private school busing and concentrate on the public schools. Three years ago our Tewksbury School Committee did just that at a cost of $7500 to the taxpayer.

If our former school committees had worked as hard on public education, as they did on private school busing, then many of us "Pubs" would not be facing the problems that we are now.

Why did this happen? Well, as many elected officials indicated to me: private school parents vote, so give them what they want; that's a great theory - forget the schools so you can get re-eelected.

So that has been part of the history of this controversial issue. Fortunately now this issue is in the hands of the people. The special town meeting in June showed that as people are becoming aware of the financial situation in Tewksbury they are not happy with it. What you saw at that meeting, Mr. Conlon, was not public school parents looking for revenge or the like; but rather you saw concerned taxpayers saying that if we are forced to cut the budgets of the police, fire, public schools and public works departments, then we cannot afford the luxury of private school busing.

Respectfully,
Joseph P. O'Brien

Dear Larz:

One must smile when one reads your headline "Residents ask selectman for attorney," but the smile gets larger when you read in Arlene's article, the statement of DePasquale, "People buried their heads in the sand too long." How very, very true that was. People were more interested in getting industry, that they thought paid their tax bill, not that a community should be made of people. Then many people would agree, that Wilmington has had its share of special interest people who made money on that approach. Industry has now taken up the best land in town, and is about to take more, Sciarappa's farm.

I guess the question is where do people go to live. I've five children and they can't afford a place in this town, does one say industry has done it, or the money people, or the town fathers, our politicians. Mr. Gillis' comment that we are at the 10 percent minimum for low cost housing, we far surpass that when one considers all the mother-in-law built apartments that are rented, and the other bootlegged rentals there are. Maybe it's about time that they were made legal, that the town allowed duplex, side by side common wall. Our history tells us the founder of the state of Penn, a man of peace, a practical man started it.

Another thought, also make it tri-plex, three units side by side, not stacked as in Boston. But that then might be too simple, might displease a few special interest groups. Now don't tell me, present it at town meeting, what's needed is a referendum vote, maybe you should ask your readers to take a poll on this.

Duplex's, triplex's can stop apartment complex's long row condominium developments which will be forced through, if people haven't awakened to the fact yet. Yes we have people against their sort of housing, also people against schools, people who want their tax bill paid. What was one of the major arguments for the high school, the town needed good educational facilities to attract good industry, as if by inference we don't have enough now.

Yes a simple solution is to allow duplex and triplex housing, this might avoid another piece of choice Wilmington real estate going to industry. Might even help the Arlene Avenue problem, might give an image that Wilmington is trying to do something. But then this might be too simple, too practical, maybe too political for our town fathers to handle, all it would take is a special town meeting, cost the town less than a lawyer.

Face it, as your son said at a meeting of people interested in the Ipswich River, being we are its headwaters, it is our water supply, problem is people here in this area are too provincial. No truer words said, but then there are some ready to wake up. Problem is that those who don't want to wake up, have spoken out so long, they monopolize with their rhetoric.

Let this letter, besides being a view of one of your readers, be an appeal to others, let your views be made, apartment stuffed into town by the state, more industry giving day residency to people from other towns, or a practical solution.

First making the illegal legal, second making effective use of land, schools we got more than enough of. But more than this, make Wilmington a community of permanent residents. Who knows, maybe with this, one can have a place for his children to live. Like the old Italian neighborhoods. I recognize this and I'm not Italian. What I do recognize, I must smile on, give it all to the lawyers, all to some kind of specialist, why not be practical recognize that local government can do so much. Remember the state sets our charter on what we can have control over, that sets what Wilmington can do. We can approve duplex, triplex, we have a planning board for the development ones and the board of appeals for any other.

That would make appeals happy for they know when they approve a mother-in-law they approve a further illegal apartment. Maybe it would even set a moral example for our children, doing things legal for a change. You know I had an interesting thought on this why have we never heard from our churches on this. Has Wilmington been practicing a little apartheid of its own?

Conrad J. Gerhartz

Dear Larz:

Re: the letter printed in the Town Crier of July 2, 1986 concerning the Chief of Police!

If more of the townspeople attended the open hearings being held at the town hall, they might get a different slant on the operation of their police department.

Name withheld by request

Dear Larz:

Back some 20 years ago, both you and I realized that the planning of Shawsheen Tech was just a dream. Over the ensuing years we've seen this dream become a reality in that Shawsheen Tech has graduated over 4,000 students who have been successful in their endeavors and have been a credit to themselves, their families, and their communities.

Over these years we knew that we could count on you and the Town Crier for support of the operation of the school and making people realize its importance in this area.

Since I am retiring on August 1st, I wish to extend my appreciation for your whole hearted cooperation and I hope that you will continue to support Shawsheen Tech for the years to come.

Sincerely,
BenjaminWolk

Dear Larz:

I was appalled to hear that the dog officer position has been reposted. I spent the evening of June 9 at a special town meeting and heard many complimentary things about our new dog officer.

The people spoke out and voiced their approval of the fine job Ellen Webster is doing and now the job could go to a stranger, not deserving of this position.

We, the people, speak our opinion, while some of the selectmen and the town manager has chosen to apotheosize themselves with little regard for the town residents' opinion.

Name withheld by request

Dear Larz:

I think it is appalling, what I've heard about replacing Ellen Webster. If Ellen is replaced we as a community will be losing a treasure.

A couple of weeks ago I was walking my dog and I got chased by a few dogs. I called Ms. Webster and the problem was solved.

Once again I would like to say Ms. Webster is a wonderful treasure to us, the people of Wilmington. There is no one who could do as well as she does. She really cares about these animals. I've heard she pays for rawhide chews out of her own pocket. Also she takes them to the vet if they are sick. She also nurses dying dogs back to health. "She's a real life saver." There is no one better than Ms. Webster!!

Joy Clark,
a 12-year-old animal lover!

Frankly speaking

by Kevin John Sowyrda

In case you have not noticed, the Boston Globe has somewhat of a problem with consistency in its stand on political issues of the day. As proof of this, take the Globe's stand on the issue of pornography as compared to its position on the seat belt law.

We begin with the editorial page of the July 8, 1986 issue of the Globe. Though it is usually a painful experience, I regularly read this section of the paper. In any event, the Globe took a tough stand on the recent report by the special commission on pornography, which the major paper views as a potential threat to the "spirit of the First Amendment". Specifically, the commission proposes "citizen watch" committees to monitor magazine racks at local variety stores within their communities, and to report any sexually explicit material. The Globe clearly condemns this form of censorship and violation of individual rights; yet they apparently fail to recognize the issue of individual rights and the proper role of the government when it comes to the issue of the Massachusetts seat belt law.

It will perhaps come as no surprise that I will vote for the repeal of the seat belt law in November. At the same time, I can not remember the last occasion when I did not wear a seat belt while driving or riding in a car. In other words, in a democratic society such as ours, based on the principles of free choice and individual rights, it should be the decision of each motorist and passenger as to whether or not they will "buckle - up".

However, a major Boston newspaper feels quite the contrary. Over the past many months, as debate concerning the mandatory seat belt law has steadily increased, the Globe has published article after article concerning the benefits of the new law as well as the fact that "it is working". The only thing they have yet to throw at us is that wearing your seat belt prevents cancer. And yet never once have they considered the issue of free choice, government intrusion, and the First Amendment -- which they are so quick to provoke on other issues such as pornography.

No one can disregard the benefits of wearing your seat belt while on the road. More often than not, seat belts do save lives. On the same token, there are many other things that save lives that the government doesn't seem too quick to legislate. Imagine how many lives would be saved each year in the Commonwealth were there a law preventing cigarette smoking. Twenty-six thousand people died of cancer last year in Massachusetts alone. And, just as the governor boasts of the 'significant drop' in our insurance rates because of the seat belt law, imagine how significantly health insurance rates would plumit were there a 'no puffing - up law'. Now that Kitty Dukakis has been without a cigarette for years, Papa Duke would have no problem with the applicable legislation.

Naturally we are using sarcasm to make the point stick here. To justify a law based on the fact that it saves lives and perhaps a few cents on the insurance premium, could mean all sorts of legislation that might do just that in the long run, but only with society sacrificing a piece of freedom in the process. The Boston Globe, and the proponents of the seat belt law, have yet to clearly justify to the public the sacrifice of free choice.

Though the November election is a ways off, the public may want to consider how it will vote on the ballot question which would repeal the mandatory seat belt law -- and most people would probably vote for the repeal were the election held today. But for anyone out there who is still not sure, give the issue some thought as your driving back from Crane's Beach this weekend, with the old belt strapped tightly across your sunburned shoulders.

Dog catcher's job

Chapter 592 of the acts of 1950 is an interesting (to some) bit of literature. It is also, in Wilmington, called the "Town Manager Act." Chapter 592 is the law with respect to town government in Wilmington today.

One part of that law has to do with "contract" employees. Persons who are not regular town employ- ees, who do not get the benefits of health insurance and retirement, etc, as a part of the employment, are the so-called "contract" employees. A lot of persons can be "contract" persons, ditch diggers, dog catchers, envi- ronmental engineers and physicians, to name a few.

Any of them may hold a contract with the town manager to perform a special kind of work, for an agreed price, in response to an offer to employ (called a posting). If there are to be any material changes in that employment, for instance, an increase in pay, the position must be "reposted."

There was an advertisement in the June 25 Town Crier, telling the world that the position of dog officer was open. The salary of the dog catcher had been changed in the June 9 town meeting, from something over $5,000 a year to $15,000 a year.

That is to be described as a significant difference. A lot of people would, presumably, enjoy catching dogs for $15,000 a year.

The town manager has no alternative, under Chapter 592. He has to "post" the job. Anyone, including the present dog officer, can apply and name a sum of money for which that person will work.

In that June 9 town meeting at least two persons explained the point involved to the town meeting, one was the town manager and the other was the publisher of this paper.

But very few persons heard that. The town meeting was, like many special town meetings, a gathering of a special group of voters who were determined to a special program - this time the rewarding of a person ,who those people felt, should be rewarded.

That special town meeting changed the salary of the dog officer. The town manager has no alternative. He has to make a public offer to hire a person, at a salary of $15,000, or maybe less, to anyone who can be a competent dog officer.

There may be many applicants. After all, $15,000 is a fair sum of money to many persons.

New guard rail brings changes to lake

The water front of Silver Lake, along Main Street is changing. The former site of the Walter Hale ice houses was taken by the town in eminent domain proceedings last spring, and that part which had acquired the name of "The Drop" is now an attractive waterfront park.

The Hale ice houses existed from about 1910 to some time in the 1930s, when they were finally burned down for the last time.

The ditch that leads from Silver Lake to Lubbers Brook, dug in 1705, has been cleared up. Possibly some enterprising youngsters will be attempting to dam up that ditch in the near future. The site invites such action.

In the past week the place where Bill Hen Carter II used to cut across Silver Lake has had some work. A contractor for the state, last week, cut down the brush and small trees between the Hale ice house site and Lake Street. It is understood that the stone embankment will be re-inforced, and a new fence constructed.

That part of Main Street was a man made dam, to stop water from flowing down the area that is now Williams Avenue. Back in 1705 the pond, as it was then called, was dammed, and the ditch dug to supply water to Lubbers Brook, for a mill, near Glen Road.

Back about 80 years ago, before the present stone "rubble" was laid along Main Street, farmers would drive their wagons from Main Street to Lake Street, for the express purpose of soaking the wagon wheel spokes. The wood would swell, as a result, the iron tires would be more firmly held in place, and wagons and carriages could be deemed to be "more safe."

Changes at Silver Lake

The view of Silver Lake has been opened up by the cutting of brush and trees along Main Street. The guardrail in the picture is due to be replaced by a steel one. Visible across the lake is the White house, named for its present occupants, Eddie and Martha White. It was previously the home of Harold Melzar.

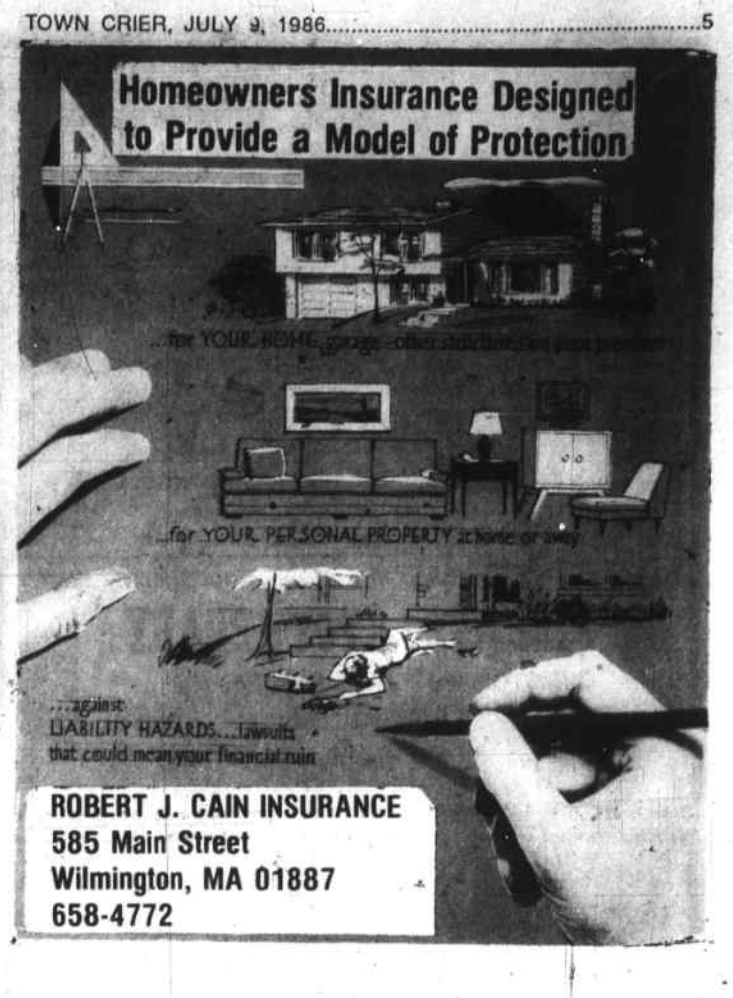

William Henry Carter II, he who was called "Bill Hen II" was a farmer who lived on Shawsheen Avenue, at Bridge Lane. There were two men of the same name, William Henry, and Bill Hen was the younger. That was how he got the "Two" added to his name.

Bill Hen II was one of several farmers who in those days appreciated the shallow part of what was then called Sandy Pond, as a place to tighten up the wagon wheels.

Task force formed on low-income housing

There are builders, Selectman Jim Stewart said Tuesday night, who are willing to "talk about the problem" of low and moderate income housing in Wilmington. Stewart was one of a dozen or so officials who gathered in the planning board office to talk about forming a Zoning and Housing Task Force in Wilmington.

The first meeting of such a task force is to be in the selectmen's room of the town hall at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, July 21. The task force will be, in effect, an advisory committee for the furtherance of affordable housing in Wilmington. Members of the Housing Authority, Planning Board, Board of Appeals and others were present at the Tuesday night meeting, along with the Town Manager.

Town Clerk Pat Lynch is at the present time tabulating how many "illegal" apartments there are, in Wilmington, the meeting was told. It seems to be an effort to promote the legal use of low and moderate housing in Wilmington.

The prices of housing in Wilmington "scares" Danny Gillis, at this time a member of the Housing Authority. A "moderate" income house, today, cost $75 to $80,000, and has a mortgage payment of $800 a month, on a mortgage of 25 years. Then add such things as taxes and insurance, he said.

Gillis confessed he was scared when he "looked down the road," at the next 10 to 15 years. It seems to him that the young people will have to be subsidized.

Stewart had already asked the chairman of the selectmen, Rocco DePasquale, and the Town Manager to set up a meeting with the builders, to discuss low and moderate income housing.

"In six months to a year we should have a game plan" he said. He pointed out that Newton has been zoned for low and moderate income housing, as has Lexington. "It can be possible in Wilmington.

Mentioned in the conversation was Kevin Hurley of Lexington, who, a couple of years ago, was the professional planner who worked with town officials and others in developing the present zoning bylaw. Carole Hamilton of the planning board said Hurley is now a consultant to private business but he "might be available."

Professional help will be needed, Buzz Stapczynski agreed, but in a pinch he and Sandy Murphy, planning board assistant, could do some part of the job. Bruce MacDonald, chairman of the Board of Appeals, added that the work of the planning committee of two or three years ago was "good."

Finances were discussed, to a degree, after the remarks of Mr. Gillis. Lillian Buckley of the WHA reported that at this time the federal government is allowing "up to $701 a month" in subsidies, for a three bedroom home, low and moderate income housing. This has to include all utilities.

The state is more liberal, she said.

"Something has to be done" she said, "when people are forced to leave homes they cannot afford to buy."

Buzz Stapczynski had a further comment about low and moderate income homes. He wondered out loud if low and moderate income apartments would be occupied by "Yuppies" instead.

"That," he said "would be a tough nut to crack.

One member of each of the participating committees will be in the meeting of July 21, plus other persons. The state, through the Teller program, can now mandate zoning changes, and the town officials feel the town should direct its own efforts.

Members of other groups are to be invited including neighborhood representatives, builders' representatives, and possibly someone from the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

WATCHING TAX REFORM

Government-watchers expect that tax reform will finally be with us this year. The tax reform version proposed by the "House of Representatives and that proposed on the Senate side of Congress are not so far apart that differences can't be ironed out in conference.

Is seems fairly certain that tax rates for individuals will be lowered, especially for those making less than $20,000. Even those with income over $200,000 would find some savings, unless they had depended heavily on deductions not allowed under reform.

When would the new law take effect? The House plan was based on a January 1, 1986 start; the Senate plan would end certain deductions on January 1, 1987 and cut tax rates beginning July 1 of next year. Both plans call for some retroactive changes on tax shelters.

Though tax reporting may be simplified at the low end, many taxpayers will want the help of an experienced accountant to work through the maze of tax changes.

by Arlene Surprenant

What do you enjoy most about Wilmington's Fourth of July celebration?

Neil Buckley: It's a community wide event with something for everybody.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kavanaugh: The whole thing; we don't have to drive, we don't have to travel; this is the best place to be. Also, it's well organized.

Linda Calandrello: I like seeing everybody down there enjoying the good time. It's so nice to be able to say hi to all your friends.

Kevin Sowyrda: Food and lots of it.

Jim Stewart: The fact that the people in Wilmington can spend their vacation in the town of Wilmington.

Linda Gaffey: Probably the comaraderie, the carnival, the fireworks, and the in-town excitement of July 4.

Frank Newell: The good music. After being cooped up all winter, it's someplace to come.

Dorothy Newell: I enjoy being here with all the people and I like the concerts.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Aronofsky:Just getting together. We still have a house in Florida and we came just for this. We came last year too.

Marylou McManus: I think I like listening to the concerts, seeing old friends and making new ones. It's very well organized and it shows in the end results.

Catherine McManus: We like the concerts, the carnival, and all the special elements.

Jim Cushing: I like everything about it: sitting on the common, listening to the bands, and seeing people I haven't seen in a while.

Kelly Cushing (age seven): The fireworks, I like the colors.

Bill Gustus: I like the nights; seeing people coming down. It's unique to this area and the community spirit is unbelievable.

Julie Gillis (age seven): The carnival and the fireworks.

Sean Berry (age five): The caterpiller (at the carnival).

Barbara Caldor: Probably the band concert and just sitting right there.

Jerry Pupa: The whole thing and the whole idea that it's something for the people of Wilmington. It gets better every year.

Peg Power: Everything. It's the best in the region. It's family oriented, clean, and fun-spirited. Even my husband is taking timeoff to participate.

Bill Story: Watching the different types of people who come and go. I like the music, of course. I like the popcorn and ice cream and I have my daughters to be go-fers. I like being together with my neighbors.

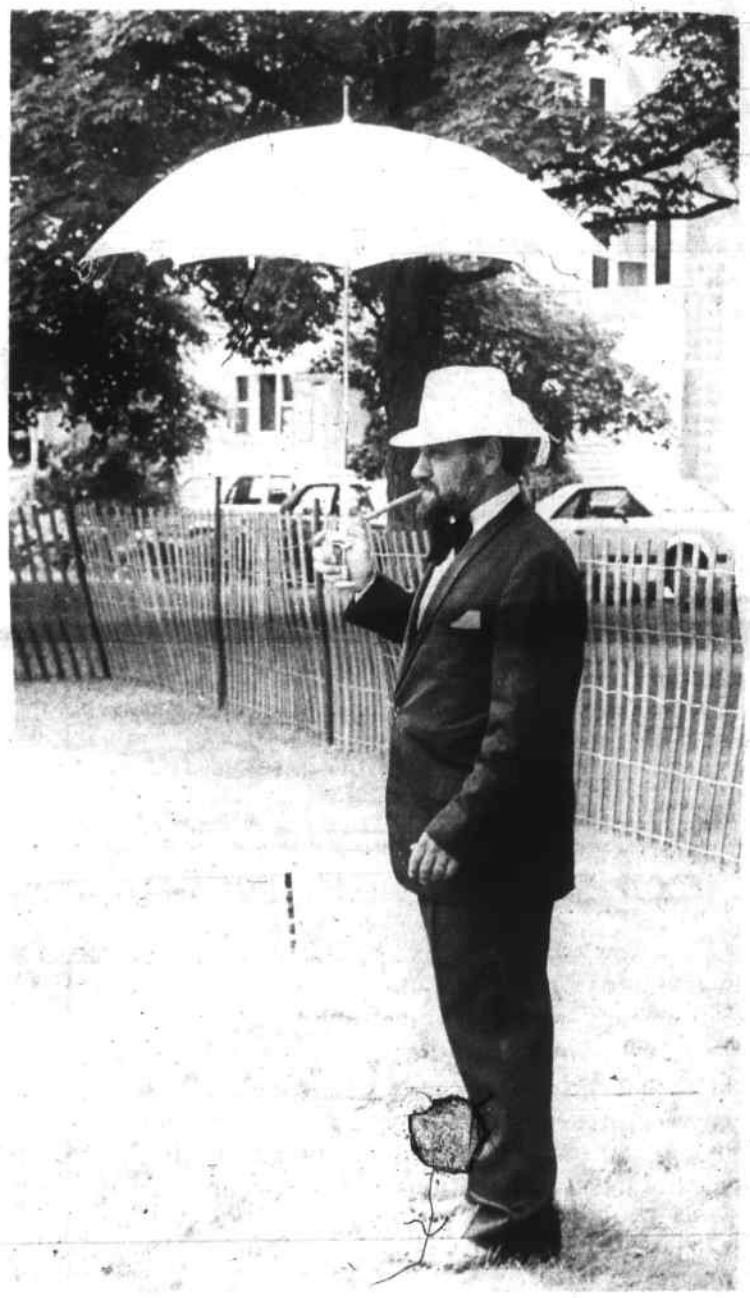

Beverly Story: I like the fireworks - that's the main attraction. I also enjoy the food and the chance to relax.

Marissa Volpe: The rides and the fireworks.

Jodi Pellegrini: The fireworks, the rides, and you get to see your friends.

Peg Dicey: Just being in town.

Bob Dicey: I think it's the tradition with the families that's important. It's like a reunion. I've been teaching for 26 years and I see kids I haven't seen in awhile.

High school renovations 'pretty much on schedule'

by Arlene Surprenant

With approximately eight weeks left before school opens September 8, Permanent Building Committee members reviewed high school renovation progress with representatives of the Sciaba Construction Corp. Monday night.

Project manager Paul Schiepers told the PBC they were "pretty well on schedule" and felt confident there would be no delay in the opening of school in the fall.

Though it may be "close," said Schiepers, because of a change in the ceiling design, the cafeteria is expected to be ready September 8. The courtyard has been landscaped and the kitchen equipment is "99 percent in," he added.

At least three areas - the music room, home economics room, and the teachers' area will not be available for opening day. And the gym is "a big area of uncertainty," claimed Schiepers, because the wooden floor can't be laid when it's too humid.

Potential delay was averted when PBC Chairman Bernie LaVita asked architect Wilson Rains to see to the removal of piles of lumber in the school basement so the plumber can begin work next week.

Though he said he was proceeding with the work and change orders, contractor Paul Sciaba asked for "something in writing," assuring them there's enough money budgeted to complete the project. LaVita said within the next two weeks he'd know "where the numbers are."

In other business, members decided to rebid gym lockers which came over the $45,600 figure budgeted for that item and proceed with ordering blue colored manual gym bleachers with an option to investigate motorized bleachers.

After viewing two different locker models, members as well as school officials were drawn to the better quality locker although LaVita said he had only so much to spend on the item.

"I think, like everything else going in the building, this should be quality," said Athletic Director Jim Gillis adding, "You want cheap, you get cheap."

After attempts were made by school committeeman Mitchell Spiris to compromise and still keep the quality, Diane Allan suggested they go out to bid once again to see if they can find something close to the quality type locker. Members agreed to her suggestion, though the action may cause a three month delay in getting the lockers.

Though money was set aside for manually operated bleachers in the new gym, members were told extra custodians would have to be hired to work them.

"This is going to be a problem. There's no way people are going to pay three, or four custodians to open and close bleachers," stated Allan.

Members said they never anticipated the extra costs and agreed to investigate motorized bleachers and other options.

Michael O'Sullivan was treated for facial and knee cuts and a jammed foot.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held in Knights of Columbus Hall, Tewksbury where Heather Okolo, the bride's niece, and Adam Wacholde, nephew of the groom,. circulated the guest book. Music for dancing was provided by Dave Garnick of Lowell.

For her daughter's wedding Mrs. Powers chose a sea green lace gown with a white rose corsage.

The mother of the groom was attired in a royal blue dress with a pink variegated rose corsage.

Maternal grandparents from Haines City, Florida, Hazel and Dick Harris,, were present with Mrs. Harris wearing an orchid colored gown with a rose corsage.

Paternal grandmother Alice Martin of West Roxbury, was attired in a dusty rose dress with a rose corsage.

Also among the guests was the bride's brother Frank Powers, Jr. home on leave from California where he serves with the Army.

Inter-City baseball

Astros struggle to gain momentum

The Wilmac Astros opened their second half in the Inter-City League season Monday, hosting the third place Grannan Club of Arlington. Though the first 15 games, the Astros have had their ups and downs, losing their opening three before defeating Augustine's, 8-7 on June 6.

The Astros then lost seven in a row until Tim Budrewicz tossed a two-hitter at the Somerville Elms on June 24, as the Wilmac nine edged the Elms, 2-1.

Prior to the holiday break, the Astros lost to Wakefield (11-6 and 16-9) and to the Somerville Red Sox (6-0) to bring their seasonal record to 2-13 at the halfway point in their initial season of play in the highly competitive Inter-City League.

Veteran outfielder Jim Kennedy of Burlington leads the club in hitting with a .424 average, while Tony Statuto of Hamilton leads the Astros in RBI's with 12.

Local Wilmington players Dave Woods (.234), Matt Kmon (.136) and Ken Cripps (.125) have played well defensively. However, their bats have cooled down since the opening of the season.

Meanwhile, local Wilmington High School grads Mark Bartnick (0-3) and Jay Hanafin (0-3) have pitched well enough to win their starts, but the defensive play of the Astros has not been equal to the task.

The Astros will be busy during the next month as they will play 10 of their remaining 15 league games at home on the familiar North Intermediate field.

The Outdoors Column

by Bill Conlon

Here's an interesting question: Do we have the legal right to fish any water in Massachusetts?

Well, yes and no, depending upon the water. (This gets real tricky.)

We have the right of access to any "great" natural pond, of 20 acres or more, for purposes of "fishing, fowling or nagivation," based on what are called the Colonial Ordinances. These laws were carried over from England to the new colonies in the 1600s, and they're still in effect. So far so good.

But determining whether a pond is "natural" or "great" is where some of the problems start. If there's a dam on the water, such as on Ames Pond in Tewksbury, it doesn't fall under the Colonial Ordinances. Silver Lake in Wilmington is a natural pond, and since it's 28 acres in size, we have the right of public access to fish.

But there are questions about beaches for town residents only, access to undeveloped ponds, maintenance of boat ramps and beaches, access to rivers and ocean beaches and a score of other headaches.

In fact, there is a permanent board in Massachusetts which deals with just such problems, called the Public Access Board.

The PAB is made up of five members, each one a director from the Divisions of Fisheries and Wildlife, Forests and Parks, Waterways, Marine Fisheries and Law Enforcement. The group has the authority to take lands by eminent domain, and though they are reluctant to use eminent domain, chairman Bob Austin said the power has been used in the past. (We're talking about some pretty big guns here!)

But Austin said there is no black and white when talking about public access, just shades of gray.

He described public access as "a convoluted and complicated mess," and with some of the difficulties he mentioned, it sure sounds like it.

For example, if a pond is heavily developed, it is sometimes tricky to find land for public access. Long Pond in Tewksbury just had two parcels of land handed over to the town Conservation Commission, but other ponds are not so easy to access.

As for establishing new beaches and boat launches, Austin said no one seems to mind unless it's in their own backyard. Then they howl, he said.

Austin also mentioned the lack of manpower to maintain the public facilities. He said the divisions involved are too short-handed to provide maintenance crews, so the work is usually left up to the towns. But the austerity imposed by Proposition 2 1/2 makes even simple maintenance difficult, he said.

And when a town limits access to only town residents, or charges a user fee, then the Public Access Board has to make a ruling, Austin said. Sometimes it's okay to charge, he said, but other times it's not.

As for public access to the sea, that's another problem, Austin said. After all, who owns the land between high and low tide?

Austin said there is a piece of legislation in the works, proposed by Senator Bulger of South Boston, to make the coastline more accessible. This bill would make things a little easier for the Public Access Board if it passes, Austin said, but the questions still outweigh the answers.

So, can we legally fish anywhere in the Commonwealth? Well, yes and no ...

If you've always wanted to see the Merrimack River up close, here's your chance. The Merrimack River Watershed Council will be holding canoe trips on the river over the next few months, for those who would like to see how well the river has recovered from a polluted past.

The trips will be on July 19 (West Newbury to Newburyport); August 23 (Litchfield, N.H. to Hudson, N.H.); September 13 (Hudson, N.H. to Chelmsford); and October 4 (Lawrence to Haverhill). The cost is a paltry $7, $5 for council members. For more info call Greg Smith, 603-224-8322, or Curt Laffin 603-889-4643, or write to the: Merrimack River Watershed Council, 694 Main Street, W. Newbury, MA 01985

Speaking of the Merrimack, there's some good news about salmon and shad:

Mass. Fisheries and Wildlife director Dick Cronin (and others) recently signed an agreement with Public Service of New Hampshire to provide upstream fish passages at five dams in New Hampshire; three on the Merrimack and two on the Pemigewasset, the Merrimack's largest tributary. Downstream passages will be built within two years so the baby salmon and shad can safely reach the sea.

The agreement is based on how many salmon or shad reach a given dam. Once the number is met, PSNH has agreed to build a fish passage at the next dam upstream.

With passages now in place in Lowell and Lawrence, the salmon and shad are reaching Manchester for the first time in 100 years. The Merrimack is back!

Wilmington police news

During the week ending July 8, Wilmington police officers responded to 12 accidents, 34 alarms, 14 disturbances, two break and entries and one attempted break.

Eighteen arrests were were made along with 10 protective custody detentions. Fourteen disturbances were quieted and nine larcenies were investigated. One vehicle was reported stolen, 11 incidents of suspicious activity were checked out and five domestic problems were quieted. Three assaults and three liquor related problems were logged, one person was reported missing and four threat complaints were taken.

Two trailbike complaints and six involving traffic were logged along with 13 reports of fireworks going off; and 10 incidents of vandalism are still under investigation.

Arrests

Following a reported disturbance on Suncrest Avenue Wednesday morning Officers King, White and Miller first placed a local man in protective custody and later arrested him by virtue of a state police warrant.

Craig Downs of 89 West Street was booked and later turned over to state police troopers.

Wednesday evening a Woburn man was arrested by Officer David McCue after the officer was summoned to Lucci's Market to investigate an attempt to collect on an altered lottlery ticket. Edmund Leonardis, 26, of 26E Dexter Avenue, Woburn was charged with possession of an altered lottery ticket, possession of a class D substance and attempted larceny. He was bailed for a Thursday court appearance in Woburn where he plead guilty to all charges and paid $300 in fines.

Later Wednesday evening Kimika Muraya of Beacon Street, Boston was arrested by Sgt. Rooney and Off. Waterhouse and charged with violation of the town of Wilmington hawker and peddler law. At Woburn court her case was dismissed upon payment of $25 court costs.

Officers were requested to break up a brawl in front of the Farmer and the Del Thursday evening. Acting Sgt. Gable and officers Neville, McCue and Peterson arrested four Woburn and Everett youths. William Stokes of Crescent Avenue and Elsie Stokes of the same address in Woburn and Steven DeBonis of Andrew Street and Judith Debonis of the same address in Everett were all charged with being disorderly persons. They were later bailed for a Monday appearance in Woburn Court.

A disturbance and fight on Grove Avenue Friday night resulted in the two arrests and two protective custody detentions. James Howley, 129 Mystic Avenue, Tewksbury was charged with underage possession of alcohol by Officer Chris Neville. Joseph Landry, 18, of 1 Main Street, Wilmington, originally placed under protective custody was arrested on a default warrant. Two juveniles were released to their parents after being put under protective custody.

Officer John Shepard while on patrol Saturday night stopped a break-in at the Woburn Street School. Three subjects fled in a car from the school and were pursued into Reading where their vehicle ultimately ran out of control and drove across the yard of a residence where it came to a stop against some bushes.

The driver was chased by Off. Steve LaRivee who caught up with him in the woods a short time later. Gregory Conners, 18, of 92 Woburn St. was arrested at the scene and charged with breaking and entering in the nighttime at the Woburn Street School. Larceny of various merchandise valued over $100, malicious damage to property, and multiple m.v.

Later in the morning two other suspects turned themselves in to the police and were arrested at the station after investigation. Peter Campbell, 34 Birchwood Road, age 18, and Stephen Schultz, 18, of 5 Randolf Rd., both of Wilmington, were charged with the break-in of the school and the larceny of over $100 and malicious damage.

Items taken included a television, a vcr recorder, typewriter, athletic equipment and an xylophone. All the youths were bailed for a Woburn Court appearance. Assisting were Sgt. Duffy and officers Shepard and Hancock.

Sunday evening a juvenile female was arrested for disorderly conduct by Sgt. Cable and Off. White after repeated reports of a loud house party on Marcia Road. She was held for Court Monday.

The Fourth of July activities saw a huge influx of people, especially around the common. Overall the crowds were orderly and appeared to have a great time all week. There were few problems even on the big night of the fireworks. Compliments are extended to Off. Shelley who coordinated public safety concerns with the committee, also to many officers who worked during the week to help keep everything running smoothly.

A special thanks to the many auxiliary police officers who volunteered their time to assist, and to DPW Superintendent Bob Palmer and his men who worked closely with the police department to keep things manageable for the week.

Tuesday afternoon Officer Jim Peters arrested a local man after a routine radar traffic stop. Kevin Stanley, 23, of Fay Street was stopped on Glen Road by the officer. Stanley was charged with speeding, operating after revocation of his license, giving a false name to an officer and possession of a counterfeit license. He was bailed after putting up $100 in cash for an appearance Tuesday at Woburn Court.

Health Maintenance

One of the subjects covered by Fran Calann of Congressman Markey's office when she visited the Center last week was Health Maintenance Organizatons (HMOs) With Blue Cross/Medex policies increasing every year, many seniors are giving this type of health coverage some thought. Before committing to a specific HMO, the following questions should be answered:

What hospitals, nursing homes and physician specialists are affiliated with the HMO?

Is your current doctor already affiliated with the HMO?

Can you get 24 hour coverage and where do you get it?

How many different types of doctors practice at the HMO?

What is the cost of prescriptions in the HMO?

What is the cost of enrollment and monthly payments; how do they compare with supplemental insurances?

What is the doctor turnover rate at the HMO?

Do doctors make housecalls?

If your doctor is not available for you, will you be checked by a physician assistant or nurse practitioner?

What if you wish to disenroll from the HMO? How much will it cost you?

How long will it take to get a specialist if your treatment calls for one?

Are you covered if you travel out of the area the HMO is located in?

Most of the HMOs in Massachusetts are good, but make sure you know what you are covered for before you commit yourself to one. In Mass. 24 HMO's are serving the people across the state. According to the EOAA annual report for 1985 14 HMOs were expected to serve seniors by the end of the year.

Yard sales for early birds on prowl

By JIM ROUILLARD

Is it muskrat, sable or skunk?

Does the lawn mower have moving parts?

How much for the what-not, and how about the whoosie?

There are a few minor discouraging tales, of course, of heavy labor yielding profits so small the game is not worth the candle.

Sometimes sunshiny Saturdays seem wasted in fetch-and-carry, and the family treasure has been sold, in panic, for an interrupted melody.

But there are fabulous sagas, as well: the missing masterpiece found — enough money made on used clothes to pay the kids' tuition and go to Bermuda — and the 25-cent china bowl worth a hundred thou.

They're all part of the booming great American pastime: the common, garden variety yard sale, as basic to native and naturalized across

J.C. Penney's sales are as easy as pie

By DOUG BOYLE

BILLERICA — When sales are down, the managers are usually the ones to take the brunt, and at the J.C. Penney Catalogue Outlet Store, it's no different.

The difference is in how they take the brunt. Recently the 12 managers from Store Manager Glen Gammons to the personnel and merchandising managers all took the brunt of pies being thrown at them by employees.

The symbol of every worker's dream to strike back at the boss was the result of a 12-week contest, set up to increase the percentage of referrals from regular store customers to the catalogue.

Gammons said the contest was such a success, resulting in a 27 percent increase in catalogue referrals, that it will be done again starting at the end of August.

"We tried contests with prizes," Gammons said, "but this works better. It works better than money."

"It's done with a sense of humor," he explained.

According to Gammons, the contest worked by a sales clerk directing a customer who was having difficulty in finding a product to order it through the catalogue. Every time this was done the salesperson received one mark for a referral. Every five referrals equalled one pie.

However, no one could really explain what drove overall pie winner Hazel Malfy, of Billerica, to make enough referrals to receive 18 pies. In all a total of 53 pies were thrown.

Gammons explained "the whole program was to motivate people to ask for something we don't have at the regular stores."

According to Gammons, the pies were supposed to be thrown from a specified point but some of the employees really got into the spirit of the occasion and jumped over the line to make sure their special targets were the recipient of the dessert.

And Gammons received his share of whipped cream. "I had to put my clothes in a plastic bag," he said.

To show that the recipents of the pies had no hard feelings at the end of the contest, the 12 managers turned around and served the employees lunch.

Gammons explained that the managers will get a break at the end of the next contest however, as the targets this time will be the 22 supervisory personnel.

He explained that he had brought the idea with him from St. Louis, where it had been used successfully in the past.

Other contests will be used in the future with different incentives so that the idea will still be as fresh as "pie."

The contest netted an overall increase of 250 referrals, and about 12 percent of the catalogue sales came from the referrals.

Of those that received the pies in the face it is not known if any particular targets were being picked out because of the poor aim of the employees, but the feeling that all the participants had a good time did prevail.

Wimbledon fevor

With Wimbledon winding down, I thought you readers might enjoy reading a profile I did on Wimbledon champion Martina Navratilova for a Boston magazine right after she won Wimbledon in 1978:

It's 4:00 on a Wednesday afternoon. Inside the Walter Brown Arena at Boston University, which is one of two part-time homes of the Boston Lobsters of the World Team Tennis League (the Cape Cod Coliseum is the other), player-coach Tom Gorman and teammate Betty Stove of the fourth place Seattle Cascades are just finishing up two hours of practice before this night's match with the first place Boston Lobsters.

Lobsters player-coach Roy "Emmo" Emerson, with teammates Tony Roche and Terry Holladay, mill around the runway leading to the locker rooms. They're waiting to take over the court for the next couple of hours. Except for the team's operation manager, assistant PR director, and a handful of junior high school aged kids who run after balls when they get away from the players, the arena is empty.

"Where's Martina?"

Anthony "Tony" Dalton Roche is the spitting-image of brawny Australian movie actor Rod Taylor and hails from Wagga Wagga, Australia. He can't find Martina Navratilova, the Lobsters' highly touted superstar and recent heroine at Wimbledon. The very sound of her name brings to mind flashes of subtle controversy. Although they aren't as explosive as WTT opponent Ilie Mastase, they are nevertheless ever present. If it's not Navratilova's tempermental personality, it's concern from a tenth of the world's population over the fate of her shoulder — the result of her recent high-

Yard sales

the land as the need to strike a bargain and make a buck.

Called by Reading's Cliff Proctor "The Great American Leveller," yard sales comprise a growing and moveable national feast of treasures and trash, for high caste and low to mix and mingle, gently jostling, more or less, for bargain, barter and Yankee swap. And yard sales are alive, well and flourishing this summer in Middlesex County.

Last weekend, though, whether because of the holiday or the heat, was a meager one for local yard sales. Few were listed, and fewer of those came to pass — as at least one that had been advertised remained behind strictly closed doors and curtained windows, for unspecified reasons.

But a yard sale at the Daly household on Howard Street, Reading, started ahead of time — despite the advertised caution against early birds — and earned timely profits.

Mary Daly, self-declared as "new at this sort of thing," began her first-ever yard sale Saturday. It opened with the Daly's Doberman pinscher announcing the arrival of the sale's first customer, more than an hour before published starting time.

Mrs. Daly's advice?

Start early, she said, as she and daughter Elizabeth tried simultaneously to heft and arrange furniture and china, smilingly answer customer's questions, and set prices for the usual wide range of goods, from blue and white china to a barbecue grill.

"It used to be people would meet at church socials," commented Proctor, an enthusiastic Reading yard sale devotee. "Now they go to yard sales. It's great because you can find things that haven't been unearthed for years. It's a voyage of discovery."

Stoneham's Senny Bellino agreed.

"It's amazing what you can find," she said. "I went to one where an elderly couple had died, and they had never thrown out anything. I found some wonderful dishes from the 1930s.

"I just wish that when I was younger and had little children I had known about flea markets and yard sales. When money is tight it's foolish to go to stores and pay such high prices."

The Dalys' goods were being bid on even as they carried things out. Forty-five year-old maple chests were sold instantly, before the sale officially began. Mary Daly cheerily answered a chorus of confused questions, the most common of which seemed to be "Is there anything else in the house?"

There was, presumably, though not for sale.

The Daly affair was only a yard sale, after all, not an estate sale of the entire contents. But yard sale habitues, like any addicts, can be voracious.

A careful watch of the faces of potential buyers revealed a host of emotions, from gentle browsing to the fervid hope that some great bargain might at last be struck.

Ruth Watt of Reading, well-dressed, sell-spoken, and expecially well humored, quietly joked about the fish represented at the Daly yard sale.

"That's a flounder," she remarked, of a whimsical ceramic tile the writer was too slow to snatch before another buyer seized it. "And that's a mackeral. I know my fishes," she laughed.

She added that she has been in search of a "Bauhau" lounge, which first sounded like "bow-wow." The lounge is, according to Ms. Watt, a very well designed and well made Scandinavian couch which usually sells new for about $200. She said she hopes to pay less if and when she can find one.

In the meantime, she had found some attractive glass egg cups, among other things, and her visit to the the Daly yard sale was a success, despite no "bow-wow."

Among other aspects of yard sales that Clif Proctor likes on his voyage of discovery is the quality of goods unearthed. and the revelation of vanished craftsmanship. "A lot of modern stuff is plastic," he said, but the material and strength of older items are finer than those of many modern pieces.

Proctor, too, likes to watch the expressions on peoples' faces. "I've found it,' " he said, may suddenly light up a person's entire face, as the customer sees the bargain or the treasure.

"You get to see more of Reading than you've ever seen before," he added, "finding little lanes you never knew existed. With some people yard sales get to be an obession — and yet you just never know what's going to surface. Maybe just one item will make it."

Meanwhile, a good-natured discussion had resumed on the nature of air conditioners. Clearly a woman who subscribes to truth in advertising, Mary Daly always answered questions about the air conditioner by saying it had blown a fuse that morning.

Whether that meant malfunction — or just that air conditioners should not be plugged into extension cords — remained that subject of a continuing cheerful and lively debate, and no-one went away mad.

Though it was her first venture, it soon became clear that Mary Daly has true bargaining blood in her. Offered $2 for a new bag of charcoal briquets, she accepted, with a proviso: "You have to take the grill as well."

"But I've got three already."

"So make it a quartet."

"Ah, so the buyer has to carry off something he doesn't want as part of the deal?"

"Well," Mary said, "You know the old adage of one man's trash is another man's treasure. Help me get rid of my trash."

But Mrs. Daly's insistence on taking the grill was only the touch of a joke, after all, and the customer carried away his two buek briquets, without being cumbered by still another grill.

All of which reveals in Mary Daly no trace of ruthless haggling whatever — but a heart as soft as the Irish spring.

As for future yard sales, Mrs. Daly may or may not hold them. But if she does, she will assuredly take her own stated advice and start preparing early.

Early birds after all, especially those who come to yard sales — frequently rise at dawn in quest of the worm.

MARY DALY OF READING AND DAUGHTER, ELIZABETH, hold two items, electric broom and polka-dotted, mouse-shaped teapot, from weekend yard sale that netted profit, humor, and early birds. Yard sales are becoming burgeoning local and national past-time.

Grandparent classes

Childbearing in the 1980s is not the same as it was in the 40s and 50s when today's grandparents were just becoming parents. A new course offered by New England Memorial Hospital in Stoneham will give grandparents and grandparents-to-be a chance to explore those differences and share ideas on relating to their children as parents.

Working mothers, day care centers and house husbands are much more common today than they were 30 years ago. Add to that the changes in the medical and social factors that are part of early childhood development and you can see why today's grandparents might be confused.

The NEMH Creative Grandparenting class will begin Sunday, July 13 at 6 p.m. in the Laboratory Conference Room. For more information, or to register, call Health Education, 665-1740, ext. 426.

IMPROVE THE VALUE OF YOUR HOME...

with a new bathroom installed by Brogan Plumbing & Heating.

Today, many homes have an outdated bath that was installed in the 1950 or 60's when the home was originally built. Much has changed in styles, color and function. Faucets and showers that conserve water, bathtubs that retain heat better, water closets that flush with less water and of course, in a style that will enhance the value of your property and at a cost that is much lower than you think!

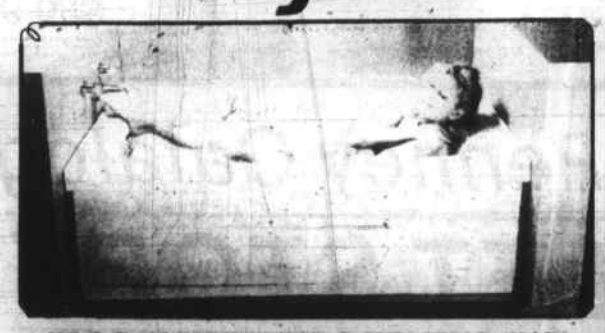

Remodeling the bath (and kitchen) can become a wise investment. For that investment we recommend Eljer plumbingware, a leader in plumbing fixtures and fittings offering new ideas for remodeling or new construction. Make a statement about your lifestyle and invest in the one room that so often gets overlooked, the bath.

About Last Night and Little China

About Last Night Starring Demi Moore, Rob Lowe, Jim Belushi, Elizabeth Perkins. Directed by Edward Zwick. Produced by Jason Brett and Stuart Oken. Screenplay by Tim Kazurinsky and Denise DeClue. Based on David Mamet's play "Sexual Perversity in Chicago." Rated R (profanity, nudity).

With language often as raw as the sentiment, the screen adaption of David Mamet's award winning play "Sexual Perversity in Chicago" may just be the signature film of love stories for this decade.

When Demi Moore and Rob Lowe leave a rowdy Chicago bar for a one-night stand, they find to their utter amazement that they actually like each other, and want to see each other again. Jealous and out of sorts over the budding romance are Lowe's and Moore's best friends, played respectively by Jim Belushi and Elizabeth Perkins. As an oafish, cussing womanizer, Belushi is a single woman's nightmare: a polyester tie knotted around a self-serving mentality. Perkins, in her screen debut, is snitty and bitchy without losing any of the facets of her personality. She is first and foremost a friend, even if she doesn't like her roommate's relationship with Lowe.

Moore is at her best in this flick, which lets her purr sexily as well as bare her emotions. Unfortunately, Lowe cannot match her strength as an actor, and never rises above his pretty boy image. It is Belushi, however, who steals the show. At the same time he is both outrageously selfish and charming, in a crude sort of way. He gives real characteristics to what could have been a caricature by avoiding parody and brutish overkill. Of course, he had intelligent, flowing dialogue, a talented director and a compelling storyline to help him along.

Big Trouble In Little China Starring Kurt Russell, Dennis Dun, Kim Cattrall, James Hong, Victor Wong. Directed by John Carpenter. Produced by Larry J. Franco. Written by Gary Goldman and David Z. Weinstein. Rated PG-13 (profanity, violence).

The most glaring fact about a movie billed as a mystical action-adventure-comedy-Kung-Fu-monster-ghost-story is that it is a bit hard to follow. Actually, you probably won't be alone if you find yourself muttering, "What the hell is going on?" about 10 minutes into Big Trouble In Little China, as there are a lot of facts and very few explanations.

True, comic book-type movies aren't supposed to be realistic, but at least you have to believe the basic concept if the characters are going to come to life for you. There isn't a chance of this happening with such an oddball picture as this one, directed by John Carpenter. Honestly, how can you believe in an ancient, Oriental temple buried beneath San Francisco when it is outlined with tri-colored neon?

The only part of this picture that really works is the pairing of Kurt Russell and Dennis Dun as two unlikely heroes. Russell plays a macho truck driver who thinks he is a brave adventurer/leader who is going to rescue a hapless Chinese maiden from the evil hands of a 2,000 year-old Oriental baddie. But, in actuality, Russell is really little more than Dun's sidekick, which is a clever adaptation of an old theme, and the few truly funny scenes are derivative of this twist. If these two had been put into a better movie with a plausible script, this would have been a huge summer success. As it is....

Short Takes

Under the Cherry Moon is the kind of stupefyingly bad picture that causes your eyes to glaze over and your mind to wander aimlessly. While the black and white photography is pretty enough, there is no plot to speak of, less acting ability and most of the costumes appear to have been made out of lamp shades and draperies. In the future, Prince should not be allowed to direct, let alone act. Rated PG-13. x

Ruthless People is a fast paced, coarse, irreverent comedy that never loses its ability to make you laugh, even as the antics become more outrageous. A modernization of O. Henry's "Ransom of Red Chief," it's scurrilous Danny DeVito who refuses to pay two desperate young kidnappers to release his wife, a flashy, loud-mouthed Bette Midler. Rated R. ••••

Labyrinth is an aggressive, active fantasy that is the answer to every daydreamer's prayers. Jim Henson has created a perfect playland in which David Bowie is at his best as a dangerous goblin king amid a population of sophisticated puppets. Rated PG. •••

American Anthem has a computerized script that follows all the rules for making a ninety-minute music video. While the gymnastic feats are interesting, the rest of the film is not. Rated PG. •

Running Scared doesn't make it as a good cops caper or as a comedy. There just isn't enough plot. However, Billy Crystal is surprisingly tough as a detective from Chicago, and Gregory Hines is funnier than you'd expect. It's too bad the direction and script couldn't match their pace. Rated R. • ½

The Karate Kid II starts out as a better-than-average family flick, but it can't hold its own against the original. Noriyuki "Pat" Morita and Ralph Macchio are as charming as ever, but the plot eventually decays into melodramatic hog wash. There are some rousing moments, but they will probably appeal more to a pre-teen crowd than adults. Rated PG. ••

Woodchips

By ANTHONY MANCONI

Many people have completed a prescribed course of study and thereby have earned the right to affix certain letters after their names. BS, BA or PhD are some of the best known. It can be assumed that the person earning those degrees is educated. However, the words education and intelligence are not the same. Education in itself does not infer, imply or guarantee intelligence.

A professor was changing a flat tire on a road alongside of a state hospital. He jacked up the car, then removed the tire lugs and placed them in the upturned hubcap. A gust of wind overturned the hubcap dumping the lug nuts into the mud of a catch basin. The professor threw his arms in the air and hissing and moaning exclaimed, "What the heck do I do now?" An inmate of the state hospital sitting on the wall of the asylum answered his question. "Mister, why don't you take one lug nut from each wheel and the one from the spare tire? I'm sure that will get you going." "Holy smokes," he shouted, "With that kind of intelligence what in the world are you doing in that place?" The gentleman smiled, then said slowly, "Sir, I'm not here because I'm stupid. I'm here because I'm crazy!" The lesson here is clear. Don't belittle anyone, for everyone of us can learn something from anyone — yes, even a gentleman sitting on a stone wall.

Nothing keeps a family together like owning just one car. Many times some of us feel like the rooster who lamented, "What's the use, yesterday an 'egg,' today a 'rooster' and tomorrow a 'feather-duster.'" I wonder what Michael Curran is doing these days? He worked with me at the FDA Lab in Winchester. This handsome lad has the IQ of a genius coupled with a wonderful personality which I am sure will assure him a successful career in any field he chooses. Michael always mentioned his grandfather whose name he bears. Mr. Curran was a columnist for the Woburn Daily Times for many years.

Rowan Fitzgerald would rather play golf than attend church on a Sunday morning. Lately Rowan has done a complete turn-around. The priest noticed it and commented, "It's nice to see you attending church again. Is it because of my sermons?" Rowan smiled then and said, "Not yours, Father, my wife Claire's sermons." My cousin Maureen Tully took along her five year-old daughter Jane to the garden center. A saleslady asked the young lass what she would like to buy. Jane thought about it for a minute, then said, "I would like some 'bird seed.'" "Oh, and how many birds do you have?" asked the lady. "Oh, I don't have any, but I would like to 'GROW' some."

The inscription on the base of the Statue of Liberty is an invitation that has been transmitted all over the world. It's message was and still is, "Give me your 'tired,' your 'huddled' masses, etc." They came and most of them are with the government in Washington, D.C.

How many Woodchips readers remember Edmund McCue, the great radio gospel singer who started and ended his program with this hymn, "If I have wounded any soul today — If I have caused one foot to go astray — If I have walked in my own willful way, Dear Lord, forgive."

Wilmington High School cheerleaders Dawn Grinovich and Kara Larson were on hand with 12 of their cheering mates at the Shrine Football Classic. I'm sure that the 12 are as beautiful as Dawn and Kara looked in the photo in the Town Crier. Congratulations to George Boudreau and John Zaino, both of Wilmington and recent graduates of the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy at King's Point, N.Y. Gentlemen, stop in at the Town Crier's office and have a Senior Merchant Marine Captain tell you some of his experiences as commander of a troopship during WW II. Of course, I mean Capt. Larz Neilson.

The first question an ensign asked me aboard the Kenneth Bailey DD 713 was, "Sailor, what's 'PORT?'" I nervously stammered, "I think it's a 'RED wine,' sir." I was transferred the following week to the U.S.S. Alegash, a Navy oiler where I slipped, slid and skidded across her decks for the next two years. My nephew will write a column like Woodchips someday because he's nuttier than I am. He said to me today, "America celebrated its independence on the 4th of July. Do they have a 4th of July in England?" "Hey," I answered, "What do you think, I'm stupid? Of course they don't!" "Okay, what comes after the 3rd of July in England?" The next day he asked, "How many months have 28 days?" He couldn't fool me on that one, I remember the poem, "Thirty days has September, etc." "February," I shouted. Grinning from ear to ear he said, "Wrong again Uncle Woodchips, every month of the year has at least 28 days."

Folks, he's the same Dennis Tully who asked his grandmother last week, "When is your birthday Grandma?" "It won't be until November, tell me why are you asking?" "Oh," he replied, "I'm saving up my money to buy you a present." "Dennis," she said, "When is your birthday?" Dennis smiled and said, "Tomorrow!"

The Stoneham High School class of 1941 held their 45th reunion at Bear Hill Golf Club. They all looked hail and hearty in the Stoneham Independent picture. I stopped going to any of my class reunions because at the last one I attended most of the classmates were looking everyone over to see who was "falling apart." Years ago bankers were thought of being, cold, insensitive and stoic people. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. Witness the warm friendly smile of Laura Reid, Installment Loan Department manager at the Stoneham Savings Bank. I spoke to Laura recently and her sparkling personality and charisma was readily apparent to me. And guess what — Laura has been a reader of Woodchips for some time.

publicized and exaggerated injury. And close to home, it's her indecision coupled with fretting by the team's management over whether she wants to remain with the Lobsters and World Team Tennis after this season ends.

In August, following her brilliant performance at Wimbledon, Martina returned to Dallas, Texas, where she now lives most of the time, and underwent her doctor's close scrutiny of a shoulder injury. The press didn't interpret her hiatus from the Lobsters as a period of recovery resulting from the injury, because the truth was that what kept her away was a serious need for rest. This hiatus also precipitated some indecision over whether she wanted to continue the grueling pace of tournament play sandwiched between World Team Tennis. Navratilova adds, "Yeah, I needed rest but I was also very concerned about my shoulder. My doctor wanted to inject it in two or three places but I talked him out of it."

It seems that everybody connected with or interested in the Boston Lobsters is asking the same question: Is there something bothering Martina Navratilova, and if there is, what is it? Since she is very reluctant to let those around her know what's really going on in her mind lately, the answers have been left open to speculation by some of the people who have been observing her over the last eighteen months.

Most of her teammates, coach Roy Emerson and members of team management will only unofficially venture to say whether Martina is truly happy in Boston, but several sports writers have picked up on her restlessness and are willing to conjecture.

"A lot of people think she's unhappy over being buried in the shadow of Chris Evert for so long that it's getting to her now," commented one scribe prior to the Lobsters-Cascades match. "She's admitted that she'd like to be a TV commentator when she gives up professional tennis. Maybe that's why she is pleasant to the cameras and nasty to us."

There might be a lot of truth to this. Despite a cool reception with sports writers before this match, she managed to muster enough charm to appear as an interview guest on a local television station sports program. She also agreed to appear in the same capacity on national television for Home Box Office, which televised the Lobsters' August 8 match via closed cir-

INGROWN TOENAILS

Ingrown toenails are one of the most common complaints that cause people to seek the attention of a Podiatrist. This disorder is usually caused by an inherited abnormal curvature along the sides of the toenail; thickening of the nails as seen with a fungal toenail infection; and is aggravated by shoe gear. Rarely it may be caused by a bone spur pressing on the underside of the nail.

Following a thorough examination we will discuss our findings and treatment modalities. Correction is usually aimed at removal of the offending portion of nail and eliminating any infection that may be present. These procedures are done in the office, operating under local anesthesia. New techniques allow faster recovery and earlier return to normal daily activities with minimal post operative discomfort.

It is important to remember that people with impaired circulation to the feet and lower legs are more prone to infections caused by ingrown toenails. These people should seek prompt treatment for their foot problems. Periodic foot examinations are recommended to help prevent any future foot problems.

Innovative foot surgery

Bunions? What are they and what can be done?

Bunions are a common deformity of the big toe and the joint at the base of the big toe. The deformity is primarily caused by inherited bone structures and can be aggravated by shoe gear.

The problems associated with bunion deformities are usually a painful "bump" or enlargement on the inside of the foot at the base of the big toe and a deviated or crooked big toe that pushes against or under the second toe. A thorough clinical and radiographic (X-ray) examination would determine the exact nature of the deformity and if there was any need for correction.

Correction of the deformity ranges from removal of the "bump" and realignment of the big toe, to more sophisticated procedures aimed at correcting any structural abnormality.

Several years ago, podiatrists at the University of Chicago, using computer analysis and Swiss orthopedic principles, developed a procedure utilizing small stainless steel screws to hold one of the bones, corrected in bunion surgery, in proper alignment. Immediate and long term follow-up of this procedure has shown that it allows for excellent bone healing, minimal post-operative pain and earlier total recovery.

This procedure, like all other foot surgical procedures can be done in an office operating room under local anesthesia.

Roving from S-11

cuit broadcast.

If there is, indeed, something bothering Martina Navratilova (Surprisingly, her escapades have not really affcted the attitude or performance of her teammates), she will most likely reveal it as she does nearly everything else — with an element of surprise.

Suddenly, Martina appears at the end of the runway wearing an all-Navy blue warm-up suit with stripes of red and white, the team colors, running up and down her limbs.

The future Wimbledon champion was born on October 18, 1956 in Prague, Czechoslovakia. Although she has staunchly refused to discuss her family with the media, she gives all the credit for her success to her parents, who still live in Prague.

"My whole family played tennis," she related at the conclusion of the practice session. "Even my grandparents. My father brought me to the courts when I was five years old. I picked up a racquet and started hitting a ball against the wall."

At this point Martina is noticeably more relaxed — however briefly — for the first time since she had appeared on the court. After plunking herself in one spot long enough for somebody — her coach, a teammate, the press agent, anyone — to say something to her, she begins to fidget. One has the feeling she's going to leap up in the middle of a conversation and begin to do some deep knee bends.

"My father pushed me into the game, but just to the point where I needed it," she said, adding that parental pressure did not destroy her yearning to perfect the game. "Nobody could hate the game growing up and still love it so much as I do not."

Her childhood dedication saw her spend hours a day nearly every day of the week on the tennis court, all of it with a professional career firmly in mind. But the commitment wasn't an overnight occurrence.

"I always knew I was going to play," she continued, "but I never sat down and said, "Wow, now I'm gonna be a pro'. After I did — how would you say it? — some adult thinking I knew I wanted to play professionally. In fact, since I was seven, when I first saw Wimbledon, I knew."

Martina is 5'7½" and 140 lbs. and plays left-handed. Ranked No. 2 internationally by the Women's Tennis Association, she is considered to have the fastest serve in women's tennis at 91 m.p.h. This doesn't mean she isn't trying to climb further.

"A professional athlete doesn't reach her peak until her late twenties," she stated, noting that in spite of all the recent praise that has come her way there's still room for improvement.

She doesn't think that Martina Navratilova has made a sudden appearance on the professional tennis scene, as some of the media would have you believe. In fact, all those years she spent hidden in the shadow of Chris Evert ("Yeah, she's a formidable opponent." says Martina. "And from there you can go down the list."), she's really been "making steady progress."

In 1973, Martina was ranked in the top forty in professional women's tennis. In 1974 she was ranked in the top ten. She reached second or third rank in 1975 and has remained there ever since.

"It wasn't all of a sudden," remarked Martina. "I've had to work at it very hard."

Martina isn't shy about telling people why she thinks she's a more proficient tennis player than her formidable opponents.

"I just do everything better," she said. "I'm a better athlete. I'm stronger. And my attitude has improved."

Attitude, she says, can be especially important. She should know, Martina Navratilova's attitude is just a shade below Ilie Nastase's deep grey state of mind, though she is never adolescent in her antics as is the hypersensitive L.A. Strings star.

"A lot of players who don't win the first couple of matches sometimes develop a bad attitude. I've gotten to the point where I can do anything with a ball. I have the confidence that I can pull out a stroke whenever I need it. The average player can produce a great stroke when she doesn't need it. Being able to do it when you need it is the difference between being an average player and a great player."

Martina Navratilova is a great player, as her impressive statistics ascertain, but not even being great grants her any immunity from such problems as emotional injuries, as well as the usual body hurts.

'I've had injuries but I've learned to live with the fact that I'm going to get hurt," she admitted. "I'm always afraid that every time I go over a bridge in my car that I'm going to crash. I've just had to live with it. But my body is in pretty good shape."

There's a 50-50 chance that Martina will give up the Lobsters and WTT for good after this year. Another factor in her final decision is the usual, often determining reason — long green. This is one subject she skirts. What she says instead is, "In the last two years, the Fall has been disastrous," she noted. "After the playoffs, I have nothing left for tournaments."

Someone who is a bit less reticent on the issue of money is Bob Kraft, Lobsters president.

"Of course, Martina is very important to the franchise," he said. "I hope she'll continue to be a part of it. And I hope dollars and cents won't keep us from getting together."

She could earn her salary with the Lobsters in one or two tournaments. Thus the exhaustion in tournament play is no insignificant factor in the unlikelihood that she'll return to the team next season.

Martina came to the Lobsters last year after playing for Cleveland in 1976 and is in the third year of a three year pact. "I'm not really thinking long term. Most of the time I think today and tomorrow." Thinking like one who has already retired, emotionally, Martina adds, "If I don't play with Team Tennis, I'll take time off and think about tournaments."

Martina does think a little bit about what she will eventually do when she retires from the game as an active player. "There is a lot of possibilities if I quit," she said. "TV commentating, managing, coaching or maybe movies. I have to start thinking seriously about it but I've still got five or six good years left in the game. One thing is for sure, I don't want to go back to school. Once I started traveling, and I was gone three months. I went back and didn't know what the teacher was talking about."

Winning at Wimbledon has been, by far, the most exciting moment in Martina Mavratilova's life. It was a childhood ambition-dream come true.

"Every once in a while, the thought of what it felt like to win at Wimbledon crosses my mind," she said, smiling, finally. "I'm not thinking about it as much as I thought I would, though. I'll never forget what it was like. I thought, this is it. This is Wimbledon. All your life you've worked for this. In the next two hours it's make it or break it. Your whole life goes through your mind. You think, what am I going to do if I win. Or lose. It really can't be described unless you've been there."

She said she knew all along that she could win at Wimbledon. "I had the ability and I knew I was best or second best," she recalled. "I had beaten everybody at the tournament before, and I felt I was the favorite. The question was, could I produce my best tennis in a crunch."

Martina has not exactly become a familiar face on the Boston night scene. She is not fond of being out in the public often. She reacts warmly toward some people, but sometimes behaves aggressively cool toward her fans, depending upon their approach, rather than how she feels, or so she says.

"Some people are thrilled to see me, and I'm thrilled to meet them. But when I'm eating a lobster at dinner, I don't like people pointing at me and saying, "Hey, there's Martina Navratilova!"

She claims the Losters have nothing to do with her decision to leave the team, that it's "purely career-wise and I'm still trying to find out my best schedule." Somehow, one doesn't get the feeling she's thinking about departing to be closer to her toy poodle Racquet, who, incidentally, often travels with her.

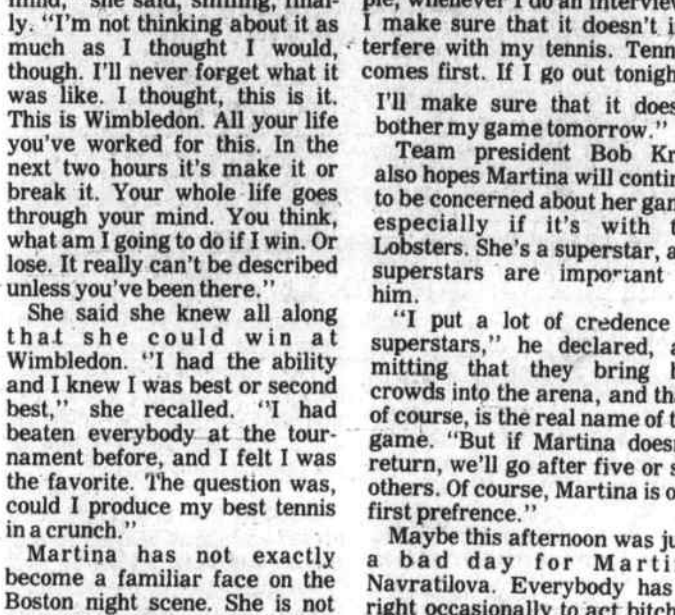

Even when she's dipping lobster tails into drawn butter, Martina is thinking tennis. It's in her emotional diet and in her blood and bones. "I'd say I'm into tennis about one hundred percent of the time. For example, whenever I do an interview, I make sure that it doesn't interfere with my tennis. Tennis comes first. If I go out tonight, I'll make sure that it doesn't bother my game tomorrow."

Team president Bob Kraft also hopes Martina will continue to be concerned about her game, especially if it's with the Lobsters. She's a superstar, and superstars are important to him.

"I put a lot of credence in superstars," he declared, admitting that they bring big crowds into the arena, and that, of course, is the real name of the game. "But if Martina doesn't return, we'll go after five or six others. Of course, Martina is our first prefrence."

Maybe this afternoon was just a bad day for Martini Navratilova. Everybody has a right occasionally to act bitchy. Too much of this, however, and Bob Kraft may prove to Martina Navratilova, Wimbledon winner, that even a "superstar" can be replaced if she wants to be.

NEW DRUG EASES ALLERGIES

If you're one of the 40 million Americans who suffer with hay fever, you may be in luck. You may be able to avoid the symptoms and the sleepy side effects normally associated with antihistamines.

Seasonal allergic rhinitis, or allergies, are caused by inhaling one of the many types of pollen species that inhabit the earth. When these microscopic pollen grains meet the human nose, they land on the mucous membrane of the respiratory tract where certain cells, called mast cells, are abundant. Antibodies, or proteins, are attached to these cells and cause an allergic reaction.

Antihistamines, first introduced in 1946, were an effective way to relieve allergic symptoms but they had a major drawback — they can sedate their users into a dangerous sleepiness that makes working, driving and other activities difficult or even dangerous.

Fourteen years of research has resulted in a new antihistamine which can alleviate allergic symptoms without producing the sleepy side effects. Seldane is available by prescription only. In tests, people were about as likely to feel sleepy when they took a placebo as when they took this new drug. You can ask your doctor about this drug that may ease your pollen troubles forever.

There could be good news for the more than 40 million Americans who suffer from upper respiratory allergies (URA).

FUTURE FOCUS

THEN AND NOW

One man's stellar discoveries became the basis for a whole discipline of thinking and learning.

Then: In 1609, Galileo, the Italian astronomer and physicist, began to build telescopes more powerful than any made before. His specially developed lens could magnify an image 32 times, allowing him to see spots on the sun and craters on the moon. Galileo's most sensational discovery, the four bright satellites of Jupiter, refuted the long-held belief that all planets orbited the earth and supported the Copernican theory—that the earth moves around the sun. By 1633 charges made against Galileo by the elite of science and religion stemmed from the astronomer's book, The Starry Messenger, which revealed his findings.

Now: More than three centuries later, scientists are sending a starry messenger of their own into our solar system for a close study of the Jovian system that Galileo first documented in his book. This is the mission of Project Galileo, sponsored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and designed to expand scientists' knowledge about the origin and evolution of our solar system and the entire universe.

The Galileo spacecraft is comprised of a large planetary orbiter and a small atmospheric entry probe. After its in-space launch, the spacecraft will take 1,000 days to reach Jupiter. Galileo will spend the next 22 months exploring Jupiter and in its limited lifespan will conduct thousands of experiments. The information will be instantly transmitted back to earth by a special earth satellite system built by Harris Corporation. Harris is the largest supplier of satellite stations to the U.S. government.

In its explorations, Galileo will look for clues to the mystery of creation that scientists believe are hidden in the stars.

Three centuries ago, Galileo provided a widely controversial glimpse at another world...

...That a spacecraft that carries his name is exploring.

Friends of Choate fill time capsule

Five "Cornerstone Benefactors" joined principals of Choate-Symmes Health Services Thursday, June 5, at the Regional Health Center in Wilmington in placing messages into a time capsule which was then sealed and placed in the cornerstone in the newly expanded Lower Level. The time capsule will be opened on the 50th anniversary of the opening of the Health Center in October, 2028.

The occasion for the cornerstone ceremony was the dedication of the new Lower Level, which is already occupied by Occupational Health Services, Ophthalmology, and the three divisions of Rehabilitation Services (Physical, Occupational, and Speech/Language Therapies) for patient treatment areas and doctors' offices. When the Health Center was constructed, foresight led Choate-Symmes administrators and trustees to include a full basement in anticipation of the time when patient services and patient utilization would require additional space.

Addressing the nearly 100 persons who attended the dedication, Roger Metcalfe of Wilmington, chairman of the Community Board of Directors, which oversees the operation of the Health Center, spoke highly of the quality care that is now available to a formerly medically underserved area. "Up to 300 individuals receive medical care here daily, up to 1000 come each month for the first time, and 65,000 patient visits are recorded annually." In the nearly eight years since the Health Center opened in October, 1978, employees and Medical Staff have increased fourfold, he added.

Guests were welcomed by the Health Center director, Nicholas A. Balog, a Choate-Symmes vice president, Paul L. Downey, president of Choate-Symmes Health Services, expressed appreciation to the Capital Campaign Appeal Committee, whose members included community residents and representatives of area businesses and industries. From the nearly 400 gifts and pledges, a total of nearly $300,000 was raised, making the badly needed expansion possible.

Donald H. Reenstierna, chairman of the Choate-Symmes Board of Trustees, commented on the new patient treatment and physician office space as the result of a lot of hard work on the part of a very friendly neighbor.

Even while Eric T. Clarke, Ph.D., chairman of the Board of Trustees of Choate-Symmes Community Services, Inc., the subsidiary which includes the Health Center, reviewed all the community services provided through the organization, patients streamed into the new area for late afternoon physical therapy appointments.

George Hazel, M.D., RHCW medical director, whose affiliation with the Health Center dates back to its early planning stages, when he worked with community residents to bring medical/health care to the area, pointed out that this is "a very difficult time for the health care industry, given the fiscal constraints and tremendous transition that has characterized it in the past few years.

"Yet the Health Center has recorded a 15 percent growth every year of its nearly eight-year history. This is a very healthy growth rate, and in response to that growth, this new expanded lower level is the first clinical space we've added. I like to think of it as another step in the expansion that will go on for many, many years."

Cornerstone Benefactors were determined by their level of generosity and have been named on a plaque to be permanently displayed over the cornerstone. They are Avco Systems Textron, who was represented by John S. Fouhy, public relations officer; Diamond Crystal Salt Company, represented by Sanford K. Carlisle, manager of Business and Development Engineering; Dr. and Mrs. George M. Hazel; Arthur H. Smith, Inc., of Wilmington, the contractor for the construction, who was represented by Mrs. Lynn Smith; and Sweetheart Products, represented by Robert J. Donovan, director of personnel.

Also placing messages into the time capsule were Downey, Reenstierna, Clarke, Metcalfe, and the Medical Staff (through Dr. Hazel).

Tours and refreshments prepared by the Choate-Symmes Food Service Department also highlighted the event.

WRC thanks donors

Dear Editor Middlesex East:

The Wakefield Recycling Committee (WRC) would like to thank the recyclers in your town who brought papers to our last paper drive. Thanks to their conributions, we collected 64.04 tons of newspapers, magazines and phone books, which we sold for $934.34. We saved $1,276.96 in dumping fees, and 1,089 trees from the paper mill. (When paper is recycled, trees do not have to be felled to make paper).

In 27 consecutive monthly paper drives, we have collected a total of 1,254.81 tons of paper; have sold it for $17,123.85; have saved $24,629.31 in dumping fees; and kept 21,330 trees from the pulp mills.

Our paper drives are held on the third weekend of every month, Saturday and Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., rain or shine, at our Junior High School, 525 Main Street, Wakefield. We welcome newspapers, phone books, magazines, computer paper, and eyeglasses for the Wakefield Lions Club vision program. We do not want cardboard/corrugated, plastic, wood, metal, etc.

Sincerely yours,
Kristen Henshaw,
WRC Chairman

Campership Committee awards

The Eastern Middlesex Council for Children's Campership Committee, co-sponsored by Voice for Children, held a raffle recently to raise funds to send area children in need to summer camp. More than thirty children from the towns of Melrose, Wakefield, Stoneham, Reading and North Reading benefited from this, and other activities, which the Committee worked diligently on over the past twelve months. Heading up this endeavor is Linda Malonson of Melrose. Her Committee members are as follows: Gail Nutile, Wakefield; Renee LeBlanc, Wakefield; Jean Melanson, Melrose; and Karen O'Malley, Melrose. Linda and her Committee deserve highest commendations for their hard work which ran the gamut from planning meetings, soliciting donations, selling tickets, orchestrating an Auction, and writing letters. Their persistance proved well worth the effort, as the Committee raised a total of $4,586.25, of which $1,182.42 represents proceeds from the raffle. The lucky raffle winners were:

Grand Prize — Louise Mortenson, Melrose, 19" Color TV.

First Prize — J. Coughlin, Wakefield, Colonial Lamp.

Second Prize — John Masonelli, Lynn, Youth Membership YMCA (Wakefield).

Third Prize — Stephanie Canestaro, Stoneham, Fruit Basket.

Fourth Prize, Sue Robinson, Acton, Cerratani's Gift Certificate.

Fifth Prize, Martha Palmer, Stoneham, Video Club Membership.

Sixth Prize — M. Fitzgerald, Melrose, Stuffed Animal.

Seventh Prize — Mildred Hennesey, Wakefield, $35.00 permanent at (Frank's Final Touch).

The Eastern Middlesex Campership Committee is looking forward to its sixth year of organization, and invites anyone who enjoys fundraising activities and committee involvement. A variety of tasks are available and individual ideas are encouraged. The Committee is task-oriented and has set its sights for even greater success. If you are interested in more information, please call Marie Cassidy, Community Representative, at 245-5267. 3-4 hours per month of your time can be an invaluable investment.

My Aunt Maria called her bank many years ago and asked about the disposition of some bonds. A deep resonant voice asked, "Madam, is this for 'conversion' or 'redemption'?" "Who am I talking to," my Aunt inquired, "the bank or the church?" Lisa Powers and coach Dick Burnham of Stoneham were named Boston Globe's player and coach of the year. Congratulations also to Kristen Seabury for being named "Bonnie Bell All American Team, member." Woodchips is proud of all of you because you're the GREATEST!"

With Me, You'll Make It

He was told, "you'll never make it
So why even try
The road's too rough and bumpy
And the hills are much too high.
Why break your back in trying,
You can't do it anyway.
Just sit in the morning sunshine
And enjoy the summer day."
He got up and started walking
A slow but steady pace
And though he'd trip and falter
There's a smile upon his face.
For there's a, "guiding hand," beside him
That lifts him when he falls
And a voice says, "with me, you'll make it
And the same is true for all."
